Henry (Harry) Hewitt was born in a house at Beaulieu a little town outside South Hampton, England. He was christened in a church at Boldre. At the age of nineteen he left England with his sister Martha and her husband James Pearce on board the "Ophelia" arriving in Brisbane in 1875. After spending nine days in quarantine at Peel Island they moved to the German Settlement of Nundah. For a time they worked in the Government road gangs cordroying the road between Nundah and Clayfield.

In 1882, they arrived at Mt Mee under contract to John Anderson, to clear land for his proposed sugar plantation. James Pearce had selected land for farming but in 1896 sold to Harry prior to moving to Kenilworth.

In 1891 Harry had married Robina Hay Sprunt, who had been the first government appointed teacher (following Richard Thomas), to Mt Mee. They settled on their newly acquired farm in Robinson Road, which they named "Beaulieu" and remained on the mountain for the remainder of their lives. They raised a family of three sons Charles, Jack and Victor and two daughters Jean and Madge. Except for the children of their daughter Jean, all of their grandchildren were to attend the Mountain School.

Harry made a great contribution towards the success of Mt Mee as a dairying area, when, for the cost of 6/- per lb, he introduced paspalum to the mountain. This grass, together with Rhodes grass (kikuya), was to form the basis of the grazing areas for the dairy cattle, and lead eventually to Me Mee becoming a very successful dairying area.

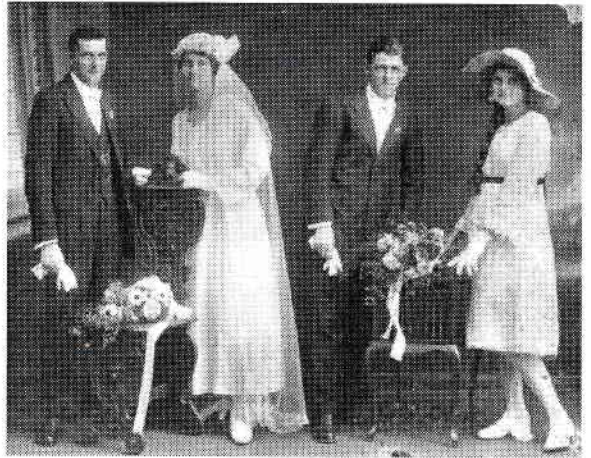

Harry had originally arrived to clear timber. He was an accomplished axeman. His descendents followed his interest in the timber industry and some have gone on to become well known axeman in the sport of wood chopping. Many of Harry's descendents still remain in the area.
